PVM RETROSPECTIVE

Large potential spread of user personas and groups

Making it a challenge to move from people of many cultures & backgrounds

April deadline is not far away!

Getting right version of the book heard

852 Languages in Papua New Guinea

Not delivering something that resonates, making too many assumptions, potential to deliver something that is a stone of something else e.g. ODC

Support from DFAT

Learn to leverage some of that work

Milestone goals from DFAT

The team, from a perspective, need to be clear on what they are doing

Clear vision for the project about what problems we are trying to solve

Support that helps potential, the opportunity to create something amazing

Communication has been really strong within the team, which is helping us to move forwards quickly and with a clear purpose

Passionate and expert team members and POs who really deliver the best experience possible

Good shared goals so far - good momentum

Good collaboration between devs

Very range of skills and experiences among our team members

Team allows me to ask noob questions.

Online platforms - Slack, Zoom, etc working really well!

A clear shared goal and desired outcome

Really good communication and frequent catches with the team

Slack & Zoom VC helping in helping our work together well as a team

STORM - What are we worried about?

- Not having the co-design workshop enough if we are on the right track or not
- Not having the ability to do user testing with large number of people for all mobile devices
- Shipping with some institutions and people in the Pacific
- Credibility of User testing

ANCHOR - What is helping us back?

timoslimo This image feels a lifetime ago. I think I took it on Sunday.

The Pacific Virtual Museum pilot started with such hope and optimism for us in January but the world has turned around on us all.

That map on the far wall we hand drew (that property is probably still not aware of) has every nation state in the Pacific on it. It was there to inspire and focus our mahi each day. It remains there, but we do not.

For now we focus on keeping ourselves safe and those of our whanau and friends across the Pacific safe. The work continues and in ways we never imagined. We look forward to sharing that process with you soon.

Be kind to each other in the weeks ahead. Look after yourselves. Stay safe.
